Paul Klug's distinctive design style—some have called it elegant transitional—uniquely reflects decades of trends and traditions. Trained in contract and residential design, Paul has been practicing continually for the past 25 years throughout Chicago and the suburbs, as well as nationally and internationally. Today, Paul is assisting Mariano's Fresh Markets as Interior Styling Director for the new Chicagoland stores.

Paul believes designing a home with a client is a very personal experience—that it should be the start of a relationship that's not meant to end when the initial project is completed. Indeed, the greatest testament to the value of Paul's work are his many longstanding relationships with clients as they have acquired new or redone their homes over the years. "Ironically, after decades of living in Chicago and now moving to Lake Forest, my empty-nester clients are moving down to the City and taking me with them...Go figure!" says Paul.

Trained at Inchbald School of Design in London, Shelley Johnstone Paschke has a vast knowledge of international design that is difficult to match. "I have had the opportunity to study, work, and travel to some of the most beautiful and interesting places in the world," she says.

In her more than 20 years of interior design experience, Shelley has developed a design aesthetic that she describes as timeless elegance with a chic modern flair. Still, her expertise covers a variety of styles and trends. "I've built up a large and varied inventory, and have an appreciation for many different aesthetics," she says. "I can access this variety on behalf of my clients and projects with an integrated vision."

Shelley's favorite kind of project is one in which the architecture and design processes are integrated—this allows her to approach the entire process from a lifestyle perspective. She considers each detail and how it contributes to the overall appearance of the home. "I create a space that is timeless," she says. "I truly love what I do and appreciate the gracious and lovely clients I get to work with."
